

The Treasure of the Caribbean-By Vinal

Dodo opened his eyes. He was out at sea. Dodo remembered nothing about what happened. All he remembered was the clear blue sky and the crystal clear ocean and him looking up and then everything became black. Now, what was the weather like? Savage, cacophonous, sound of thunder and lightning, and waves hitting Dodo's boat like a hammer and a nail. ✓

The waves were pounding the boat. Water got sprayed into the boy's eyes, while he was holding onto the tiny, miniscule minuscule boat, for dear life. The boat started groaning and Dodo knew that he should not have not come out to sea.

Dodo was petrified and was screaming as lightning targeted his boat again and again repeatedly. Dodo's goal was to protect the treasure of The Caribbean, as he knew evil pirates were after it. He paddled and paddled not getting a single millisecond of break and he kept on paddling. After a few minutes, Dodo stopped paddling. This was not because his arms were burning and about to break, it was because a giant ship was looming over him just like the never-ending night sky. It was as tall as the mountains and as wide as Australia. Dodo gasped in shock. Then he did the never thought. He plunged into the hyperborean cold sea water seawater Dodo thought that there would be an underground tunnel up to the ship through the ship and there it was. He waved at all the sea animals under water underwater and then threw himself into the tiny hole where there was a ladder to climb up to the ships deck the deck of the ship. After a few hours of never-ending climbing, he reached the top of the brown-stained ship. Then he climbed up and there was were pirates everywhere. This was why he climbed into a barrel full of potato potatoes and closed the lid. Just then a voice called out.

"Jude! You are supposed to steer North West to get to the treasure of the Caribbean. Do you want to get there before the other pirates? They are so far they are ahead of us."

"How do you know, Daren," asked Jude.

"Because I put a tracker on all of the ships!"

That was enough information for Dodo, as he climbed out to spying spy on Daren who had said he has the tracker on all the ships. When Daren goes to sleep, the boy is going to take a look at that tracker and sail a ship to the treasure so then as soon as he got there he would get the treasure and scatter.

As Dodo went back to his barrel, he heard Daren stomping off somewhere and he heard a little drop. It was the tracker. Dodo knew he was very fortunate to have the tracker just drop to him and this made it easier. He ran back to his barrel and hid until Jude, the steering person went to bed and then finally, Dodo went out there and did what he had to do. After hours of sailing, he stopped the boat and plunged into the water. Dodo looked frantically in into the water. He knew this was the spot as all the ships competing for it was were coming this way. Dodo looked and after a few minutes, he saw a golden light. He swam and got the treasure. Then he steered the ship to shore to give it to the person to who whom it belonged. His father. After about 2 hours the boat hit the shore and Dodo ran to where his house was.

“Father. Father. I got it!”

His father was extremely pleased with Dodo (that he) so let him keep the treasure. Dodo opened it and it was full of diamonds and gold. Dodo shouted in delight and lived a wealthy, kind life. Then he got to hear the pirate’s shock about were where they were and he got to hear Daren shouting about how off-target they were.

You did amazing with the narrative but you need to address a few setbacks to make your narrative writing impeccable so that the reader can imagine the scene vividly.

You need to work on the use of extended metaphors/ personification, high-energy verbs and exaggerated adjectives. I can see the potential of narrative writing in your piece but you must work on the use of descriptive words to make your images crystal clear.

For example, you may start by painting the scene shown in the picture____

The infuriated sky turned into auburn black, and the clouds grumbled with the roar of a lion spewing out lightning bolts all over the sky and setting the humungous sky on fire.

Similarly, follow the exact technique for how Dodo feels. Exaggerate the emotions of fear, and helplessness and how he encounters the whole situation with bravery. You must stack high-energy verbs for his actions, and use complex colours to paint the scene. Utilise five senses techniques to describe the narrative. Use extended metaphors, personification, similes etc to spice up your writing.

You may work hard on the grammar, work on sentence structure and rephrase to provide clarity. Grammatical errors are highlighted above.

Hope you find this feedback constructive and implement it to get a better mark.
