

Part 2:

Question 1.

I believe that I can make a good contribution to North Sydney Boys. All the teachers that had me under their kind care all complimented me on how I invariably helped my peers with any task and excelled in Maths, English, and Creative Writing. I am a kind, caring person that looks forward to helping others. In my 2022 report, my teacher stated that I “always is ready to help” and that I “outshone other students in many subjects” it stated that “Albie is a gifted child that is extensive in a variety of subjects including Maths, English, and Writing. He is efficient and reluctant to give up. We also adore how he is cute and active, always ready for a task”

The teacher that wrote that was Mr. Packham, my fifth-grade teacher. He also mentioned that I would still listen attentively even if I was the best in the class. I also volunteered to help him do some tasks when he hurt his back and couldn't bend down. When he was away, I had the idea to bring together the class and make a “get well” card. There were also jobs to do. Most kids wanted to do jobs because they didn't want to stay in class, but I volunteered because I had the best academics and because last year, my best friend had an emotional breakdown and helped the principal do some tasks. I was there to help him do them.

My academics, ^{delete this comma} were so easy that my teacher had to go to the year 6 gats class to find something even remotely difficult for me. I also taught my classmates sometimes if they were struggling. As I reiterate, I excel in writing. The news of my writing spread across the school, resulting in even the year 6s asking me to check their writing. Although you might think it's a good thing, there is also another side. ^{Unsurprisingly,} ~~unsurprisingly,~~ winning so many awards means holding lots of grudges, although I try as much as possible to resolve them as soon as possible.

Question 2.

I have never had a leadership role, although I have tried out for one. I was in year 2, and at that time, there were 20 options and they could only pick 10, so, they picked the first 10 that they saw, and unfortunately, I was not in that “first ten” so I failed to get in. ^{delete this period} every chance I got, I have tried out leadership roles every chance I got. The next year, I tried out again, but that year, the boys voted for the boys only, and the girls voted for the girls only. There were more girls than boys so, the girls won. I've never managed to obtain a leadership role, but I have been able to get some pretty good ones such as the person who delivers all the monthly orbit newspapers.

Note:

Your answer to the first scholarship question is sufficient. You have also backed it up with expert testimony, your teacher. Good work on that. Moving on, the answers to the second scholarship question is quite alright, too because you were honest. I commend you for staying true to yourself because there are some students that would lie just to get in to their school. What's important is you keep on trying because perseverance is one thing that schools want to find in their future students. Lastly, do not use random punctuation marks in sentences. That is perplexing.
