

Pt1: Topic 4:

Imagine a world where climate change is completely gone. Polar bears, penguins and many other animals that live in icy places are all safe on their big enormous icebergs. The world was not getting hotter every day. Well, this is what would happen if everyone had renewable energy sources. Here are three reasons why we should transition to renewable energy.

Firstly, there are many environmental benefits that come with renewable energy. Climate change is a big problem in today's society, however, we can stop this by switching to renewable energy. This can save the environment from all the harm we have done to it in the past by using fossil fuels.

Next, using renewable energy can be used forever, as things like solar panels, wind turbines, and nuclear energy can be used forever as all they need is the sun or wind. Things like coal, however, can run out. This is another reason why a transition transitioning to renewable energy is necessary for a time like this, where we use a lot of energy in our daily lives.

Some people who still would use fossil fuels instead of renewable energy would say that it would be cheaper to buy fossil fuels and use them for a cheap energy source. However, fossil fuels would one day run out, and you would have to buy more. Renewable energy on the other hand, is more expensive at first but is renewable, creating a cheaper energy source than fossil fuels.

Because of these reasons, a switch to renewable energy is very beneficial for our society today as it is renewable and it can help the environment in many ways.

You can also add in some figurative language, such as metaphors and similes, to create vivid images for readers. Furthermore, your work needs more personal opinions and evidence for your points. You should include at least one quote from an expert source that supports your argument. Moreover, in order to convince the reader to agree with you, you also have to know what you're trying to get them to disagree with. Your audience may be completely stuck in their ways, so knowing both sides of your argument—and how to effectively counter the opposition—will assuage any follow-up questions a reader may have that can cast doubt on your position. Another important aspect is an emotional appeal, as it targets the audience's sensitivities and provides a logical explanation for why their beliefs should change. Please elaborate on your writing to make emphasise your stance to get the readers to agree with you. Please take note of the suggestions to improve your writing.
