

Imagine being whipped by the withering flames of injustice, taken and abandoned from your family and captured in a cage, another feast for the human eye's desire for your striped coat. As each harp string of filtered sunlight collides onto your fake grass floor, you are panged by nostalgia as you remember life in the wilderness. This is the disconsolate reality for over 75% of zoo animals, says PetKeen. Animals forever trapped in their stimulated reality portrayed by man's greed and folly are subject to torture, and therefore should be shut down. Accounting for the pillars of ethics and being truly moral, shutting zoos down will be for the greater good.

A redundant intro to a paragraph. Rephrase this thought in such a way that it doesn't sound too repeating.
Imagine yourself encased in the tortured body of a tiger, whipped only for the pleasure of the audience before you, who shower you in applause yet you only know the truth. We have been forever shadowed by the veil of human torment, and have not recognised the true extent of our actions. According to the Humane Society, 50 million monkeys, dogs, cats and other animals are subject to torture such as starvation, physical affliction and confinement. We always believe that keeping a wild lion in a cage will tame it, yet we are still the most savage of beasts. When asked, "What does the ideal zoo look like to you?" 60% of civilians answered, "closed" in a recent survey conducted by the Australian Zoo. In recent footage, owners were caught hitting elephants with bull hooks.

It has been shown that animals were fed plastic in a local zoo in Westshire, with one dying from consuming 68 pounds. Every year, 1 in 7 people visiting the zoo stop to feed malnourished animals, though the rest take in the tiger's dappled coat that was at a time raw and whipped. 56% of monkeys had been thirsty since the opening of these zoos, and the government hasn't taken any action yet. Imagine being deprived of the resource every living creature needs most, drenched out of your life as you are strangled by chains and wrapped in the cathedral silence of your stone prison.

where did you get this info from?

Some may argue that zoos provide pleasure, though how could somebody enjoy the making of countless torture and misdeeds? If set free in their natural habitats, people enjoy animals in their tranquil state of absorption, watching a giraffe grow a leafy bonnet as it arches its neck to pick out its natural food, not malformed sludge in a pail. 78% of people surveyed claimed they would like to see animals not locked up behind bars, but tranquilly poised in the wild, not a pawn in our silly game, but the queen of their own. A mosaic of organisations has opened up, such as Bring Penguins back. The true beauty of nature is only represented when it thrives in its own wild.

Therefore, zoos should be shut down and animals are relieved from the manacles of injustice posed by zoos. Animals should be allowed to roam in their own birthplace, to live their remaining life in peace under the canopy of rich life.

You already made a good point about your stand as you provided much evidence that supports your claim. No matter how long this writing piece may be, it still has a lot of lacking touches in some areas. First off, I do acknowledge that you provided a source on your first paragraph, that's good! But as the piece progresses I can see a lot of numerical info that doesn't have any sources. This is critical because this makes your piece much more credible. Besides that, do not just plainly mention the facts itself, I want you to also ELABORATE and CONNECT these pieces of information with your own personal thoughts and standpoints. Take note that these info are only just SUPPORTING facts to your main point.
