

Write the title of this narrative here.

I was venturing through the metropolis, the city of Sakura, Japan. The pleasant aroma of miso engulfed me like a snake, the diagonal crosswalks crowded with people rushing to work and the endless amount of unique restaurants were only the tip of a titanic iceberg. The atmospheric beauty and richness is truly incomparable to any other city in the world. Tokyo, the city of the future. The cherry blossoms were hot pink, the people were all from different castes and religions all coming together. It was a beautiful sight to see.

I traveled through the complex ash gray subway to reach the beautiful city, the billboards that come to life and the voluptuous food that met your mouth like a sword, sharp and beautiful. The Theme parks surrounded the city like a snake grabbing its prey. If you are lucky enough to be around in the spring season you can see the beautiful and elegant Sakura blossoms appear.

The crowded city of the rising sun is not only one of the most populous cities in the entire world but also the city with the most restaurants with prestigious Michelin stars! So if you want to eat, Tokyo is the place.

Tokyo is the Japanese Los Angeles, with theme parks, towering skyscrapers, huge billboards and people in every crevice.

Overall, Tokyo is an amazing place! If your going on

Note:

While you were able to describe the city of Tokyo quite clearly, however, your narrative is not aligned with the instructions. Remember that you were asked to explore the themes of danger, alienation, and self discovery. Also, you must answer the following questions: How do these themes affect your experience in the city? What do you learn about the city and its inhabitants? How does your time in the city change you? You could reply to these questions in an indirect way if that's what you want since indirect storytelling piques the readers' interest to keep reading on. Please follow the directions next time.

Part 1.

Writing prompt: Write an essay in which you describe a city that you visit. In your writing, use descriptive language to bring the setting to life and create a vivid picture for the reader. You may also include dialogue and any other relevant details that add to the scene. As you describe the city, explore the themes of discovery, alienation, and danger. How do these themes affect your experience in the city? What do you learn about the city and its inhabitants? How does your time in the city change you?
