

A forbearing breeze blew across my face as I watched the city from the balcony of my apartment. I felt everything, everything was alive. I could hear the sound of school children laughing, the blaring of car horns, the chit-chat of pedestrians walking across the road and the hum of traffic. I was dumbfounded about how busy the city was. Yet there was something off. Something that was not right about this city. It was nothing like home. I felt a gust of heavy, rough wind on my balcony. There was never any litter lying on the ground. The air was like a thick brick trying to block me from the outside world. The city was amazing, but there was a darkness, lying beneath the ground, as if wanting to hide till he wanted to come out. A malevolence that made everyone who heard about it chatter.

Note:

Great work! It has indeed delivered the purpose and the topic of this homework, but you can work more on the delivery of the sentences. There are descriptive sentences but you can also include specific gestures. Also, the transition from one sentence to the next can be improved. You can review on transitional devices to help you with this dilemma.

Marks (48/50)