

Part 2

welcomed me before the cheerful - grammar check

Crackling flames welcomed me as I before the cheerful fireplace, encased in a fluffy fleece blanket. The heat of the inferno warmed me to the core and seeped into my bones. Outside, the wind howled like a pack of wolves, searching for lost members, as snow fell heavily onto the path. I pitied the people out there, forced to work late into the night just to be able to make sure that their family went to sleep with a full stomach. The fire continued to flicker into the night, forever undying as I glanced at the clock. It was past midnight but I was still idly sitting in front of my fireplace, glued to the floor. I couldn't shake the feeling that this was where I was meant to be, in front of the fire.
