

#1 (First paragraph) a. Strengths:

- Engaging opening with a thought-provoking scenario
- Effective use of rhetorical questions to involve the reader

b. Weaknesses: Lack of cohesion Your opening paragraph jumps between ideas without a clear flow. For instance, you move from a dystopian scenario to rhetorical questions, then to a call for children's right to veto posts, without smooth transitions. This can make it challenging for readers to follow your argument.

c. Exemplar: "Imagine a world where your most intimate childhood moments are shared online without your consent. This dystopian scenario is, unfortunately, the reality for many children today. Should we not consider the long-term impact of such exposure on our youth?"

#2 (Third paragraph) a. Strengths:

- Good use of analogy to illustrate the point
- Addresses the concept of consent

b. Weaknesses: Overreliance on rhetorical questions You rely heavily on rhetorical questions, which can weaken your argument. For example, "Picture that you're having a job interview for something that you're passionate about and have trained for your whole life just to get denied because you used to be a troublemaker and messy individual as an infant." This could be more impactful as a direct statement.

c. Exemplar: "Consider the potential consequences: a promising job opportunity lost due to an employer's discovery of childhood misbehaviour documented online. This scenario underscores the importance of preserving a child's right to privacy and digital autonomy."

#3 (Fourth paragraph) a. Strengths:

- Addresses the psychological impact on children
- Mentions specific issues like social anxiety and depression

b. Weaknesses: Lack of supporting evidence Your claims about mental health issues and academic pressure, while valid, lack substantiation. For instance, you state, "This, for many, could cause high levels of anxiety, stress and potentially even symptoms of depression at such an important time." Without supporting evidence or statistics, these claims may appear unsubstantiated.

c. Exemplar: "Research has shown that exposure of personal information online can lead to increased anxiety and stress in adolescents. A study by [fictional source] found that 70% of teenagers reported feelings of social anxiety related to their online presence."

Actionable task: Rewrite your opening paragraph, focusing on creating a clear, logical progression of ideas. Start with your dystopian scenario, explain how it relates to the current reality, and then introduce your main argument about children's right to veto posts.
