

Section 1:

#1: "Have you ever wondered why many young children get harassed or cyber bullied? This is the effects of having their own social media accounts. Many people use social media for entertaining others and posting stuff they believe that will make them popular. Many times, this fails. And when it fails, people get bullied."

a. Strengths:

- You've opened with a thought-provoking question to engage the reader.
- You've introduced the main topic of cyberbullying and its connection to social media.

b. Weaknesses: Lack of coherence Your paragraph jumps between ideas without clear connections. For instance, you shift from cyberbullying to people using social media for entertainment without explaining the link. The phrase "Many times, this fails" is vague and doesn't clearly connect to the previous sentence.

c. Exemplar: "Have you ever wondered why many young children fall victim to cyberbullying? One significant factor is their access to personal social media accounts. While many children use these platforms to entertain others or gain popularity, their inexperience can make them vulnerable to online harassment when their efforts don't yield the desired results."

#2: "Many people are extremely addicted to social media and can't live a day of it. It is ok to watch social media if you're under 13 but, creating an account? No way. You might be asking, why is it ok for children to watch social media? Have you ever thought of YouTube? There are many educational videos on YouTube to help you learn and grow."

a. Strengths:

- You've highlighted the addictive nature of social media.
- You've attempted to provide a balanced view by mentioning educational content on platforms like YouTube.

b. Weaknesses: Inconsistent argumentation Your argument appears contradictory. You initially suggest that social media addiction is problematic, but then state it's "ok to watch social media if you're under 13". This inconsistency weakens your overall point about the dangers of social media for young children.

c. Exemplar: "While social media can be highly addictive, with many users struggling to go a day without it, there's a distinction between passive consumption and active participation. For children under 13, watching educational content on platforms like YouTube can be beneficial for learning and growth. However, creating personal accounts on social media platforms poses significantly more risks."

#3: "My friend, Ryan, who is ten years old, created a discord account called CoralAcrobat61. He was cyberbullied twice and was forced to delete his account. This is why many of us children aren't armed for the social media world."

a. Strengths:

- You've included a personal anecdote to support your argument.
- You've concluded with a clear statement that ties back to your main point.

b. Weaknesses: Lack of elaboration While the anecdote is relevant, you haven't provided enough detail to make it impactful. You mention cyberbullying but don't explain what happened or how it affected Ryan. This lack of detail reduces the persuasiveness of your example.

c. Exemplar: "Consider the experience of my ten-year-old friend, Ryan. He created a Discord account under the username CoralAcrobat61, eager to join online communities. However, within weeks, he faced repeated instances of cyberbullying, including offensive messages and exclusion from group chats. The emotional toll forced him to delete his account, illustrating how ill-equipped many children are to navigate the complexities and dangers of the social media world."

Actionable task: Rewrite your opening paragraph, focusing on creating a clear, logical flow of ideas. Start with the issue of cyberbullying, then explain how children's use of social media contributes to this problem, and finally, discuss the motivations behind children's social media use.

Overall score: 40/50
