

Section 1:

#1 "Rich loves his new food, so he decided to open a restaurant that served hot chicken sandwiches. Today is the first day that he opened the restaurant's door. The first customer walked inside the restaurant, and ordered her food."

Strengths:

- Clear establishment of the main character and his motivation
- Simple and direct introduction of the setting

Weaknesses: Underdeveloped Scene Setting → Your opening lacks sensory details and atmosphere that would help readers connect with Rich's excitement and nervousness about his new venture. Phrases like "loves his new food" and "opened the restaurant's door" feel flat and miss opportunities for engagement.

Exemplar: "Passionate about his signature hot chicken sandwiches, Rich finally achieved his dream of opening his own restaurant. As he unlocked the doors on opening day, his heart raced with anticipation."

#2 "He watched her eat the very first bite, he hoped she would give positive feedback. 'Does it taste like w...e...l...l...?' Rich asked with a hand quivered. The costumer use a dangerous eye to look at him and answered"

Strengths:

- Good attempt at showing character emotion through physical description
- Creative use of ellipsis to show nervousness

Weaknesses: Awkward Dialogue Construction → Your dialogue formatting needs improvement, with issues in speech tags and unclear character reactions. The phrase "use a dangerous eye" creates confusion rather than tension.

Exemplar: "He watched anxiously as she took her first bite. 'How... how does it taste?' Rich asked, his hands trembling. The customer fixed him with an intense stare before responding."

#3 "One night Rich got very tired to make about 999 hot chicken sandwiches and some customer said it's too slow to give my hot chicken sandwich quickly or I'll never come, then a lot went away."

Strengths:

- Shows the challenge of managing unexpected success
- Conveys Rich's struggle with customer demands

Weaknesses: Run-on Sentence Structure → Your sentence combines too many ideas without proper punctuation or transitions. The sudden jump from "999 hot chicken sandwiches" to customer complaints feels rushed and unclear.

Exemplar: "After preparing nearly a thousand sandwiches that night, Rich was exhausted. 'If you can't serve faster, I won't return!' a customer snapped, leading others to leave in frustration."

Actionable Task: Rewrite the scene where Rich serves his first customer, focusing on incorporating specific sensory details about the sandwich (appearance, smell, texture) and Rich's physical reactions to stress.

Score: 4/50

Section 2:

Rich loves his new food, so he decided to open a restaurant that served hot chicken sandwiches.
#1

Today is ~~the first day that he opened~~ [on his first day of opening] the restaurant's door. The first customer walked inside the restaurant, and ordered her food. Rich made the food as fast as he could. He walked slowly and ~~quivered his hand~~ [his hand quivered] and hoped the customer would love his food. So he ~~sended~~ [sent] the food to the customer with a quivering hand shaking up and down. #2 He watched her eat the very first bite, he hoped she would give positive feedback.

~~"Does it taste like w...e...l...l...?"~~ ["D-does it taste good?"] Rich asked with a ~~hand quivered~~ [quivering hand]. The ~~costumer~~ [customer] ~~use~~ [used] a ~~dangerous~~ [stern] eye to look at him and answered

"It tastes very well, it's the best sandwich that I ever ~~eat~~ [ate]," ~~answered~~ [said] the customer. Rich finally ~~can have~~ [let out] a deep ~~sign~~ [sigh]. After a moment, the customer went away, after that no one came to Rich's restaurant anymore.

The next morning, so many customers were waiting outside. He suddenly felt very weird. "Why are there so many customers going to my restaurant today?" he thought. #3 One night Rich got very tired ~~to make~~ [making] about 999 hot chicken sandwiches and some ~~eustomer~~ [customers] said ~~it's~~ [it was] too slow to give my hot chicken sandwich quickly or I'll never come, then a lot went away. Rich felt very angry and a bit sad.

"Why?" he said to himself, "Why can't I do that?" So he decided to close his restaurant tomorrow. But when he locked the door, he saw a man with a cup in his hand and ~~yelled~~ [who yelled]

"I'm hungry who could help me," then he fell down on the ground. Rich saw it and decided to give him a hot chicken sandwich, and then feed him.

"Thank you for saving me, I will repay you when I get rich, what's your name?" ~~asked~~ [said] the man.

"My name is Rich, nice to meet you!" ~~answered~~ [replied] Rich. Then he decided to open the door again to help the poor people.
