

Section 1:

#1 First paragraph: Strengths:

- Vivid sensory details in describing the sky create an immersive atmosphere
- Strong contrasting imagery between traditional and modern elements effectively illustrates the central conflict

Weaknesses: Structural coherence → The paragraph jumps between different scenes without smooth transitions. For instance, the shift from "Computers were getting set up" to "Junior designers busily coded" feels abrupt. Your pacing could be more measured to help readers follow the narrative flow.

Exemplar: "As computers hummed beside ancient temples, junior designers and traditional weavers worked side by side, each pursuing the same goal through vastly different means - one digital, one manual."

#2 Second paragraph: Strengths:

- Powerful symbolism with the phoenix metaphor
- Effective parallel structure comparing different generations' news consumption habits

Weaknesses: Sentence variety → Your sentences follow similar patterns, particularly with the use of "while" as a connector. "While the elderly constantly buy newspapers" and "while experienced weavers" create a repetitive rhythm that diminishes impact.

Exemplar: "The elderly clutched their daily newspapers from local vendors, just as the younger generation scrolled through digital headlines, each seeking validation for their chosen side."

#3 Final paragraph: Strengths:

- Compelling stakes established for the conflict's resolution
- Strong closing metaphor about Old Delhi's soul

Weaknesses: Focus maintenance → Your conclusion introduces new elements like "mouse" that don't connect clearly with the established themes. The final metaphor about Old Delhi's soul feels somewhat disconnected from the concrete examples earlier.

Exemplar: "The documents that landed in the structure owner's hands held more than just words - they contained the very essence of Old Delhi's future, balanced precariously between preservation and progress."

Actionable Task: Rewrite the second paragraph focusing on varying your sentence structures - try starting three consecutive sentences with different grammatical constructions while maintaining the same powerful imagery about demolition and hope.

Score: 39/50

Section 2:

#1 The sky was painted with ~~shades~~ [shades of] blue and purple blended with a peculiar mix of rich oranges and reds. ~~Computers were getting set up alongside the ancient temples.~~ [Computers hummed alongside the ancient temples.] Junior designers busily coded their computers to advertise their images while experienced weavers ~~who~~ rhythmically ~~sown~~ [sewed] fabrics together[,] both had one goal- to sell their products [,] but one was ~~digitalized~~ [digitalised] and the other was manual. ~~Tens of thousands~~ [Thousands] of letters were sent to the government, either talking about ~~to saveing~~ old structures or ~~to replace~~ [replacing] them for (hopefully) a better future for all the young entrepreneurs in India. Alarms ring as they join the audience of town meetings about what to do and some join with protesting.

#2 Workers from the government ~~ensures~~ [ensure] that both sides will be treated equally as they knock down walls of ancient structures. Each clashing of iron and bricks marks a phoenix's downfall and another rising from its ashes. The latest generation of humans scroll on news articles on their phones while the elderly constantly buy newspapers from the local newsagent, each still hoping their side ~~won~~ [wins] the battle. When news came that one structure was saved and another was demolished, everybody got their hopes high, sure that their side would get the government's attention the most.

#3 Large documents soon float down onto ~~an unexpecting~~ [an unsuspecting] 'ancient structure' owner's hands. The history lies in his hands. Either for the younger generation or to keep their culture. ~~Old Delhi could either remain forever in the same chapter of the same book or it could move on to be in a unexplored world nothing-not even a mouse had stumbled upon.~~ [Old Delhi could either remain forever in the same chapter of the same book or move on to an unexplored world where nothing - not even a mouse - had ventured before.] Old Delhi's soul rests upon the official's hands, spirit and personality at stake.
