

A Day of Wonders in the enchanted Forest

My Silent friend,

You may be wondering why I haven't written to you for the past week or so. Well, it's a very simple reason that I went on an exclusive excursion that time travelled me. And as usual I forgot to take you, but I can surely vividly explain what happened. So, my holiday was split in 3 parts - mythical Encounters, The Whispering tales and off-course a farewell to enchantment.

MYTHICAL ENCOUNTERS:

In a mystic world, millions of light years away from earth, thousands of creatures roamed around the exotic foliage of the incandescent forest. And, you may be wondering who were those mythical creatures that I encountered? Well, to be honest I'm now wordless.

That creature I saw was sublimely transcendent. It's cascading hair dappled with the delicate kiss of colours, not only giving a ultimate glow but a dapple of imaginary hues. I peered over a magical horn that let aloud a handful of sparkles. I hope I was in a dream, but no it was reality.

THE WHISPERING TALES

Obviously, I didn't want to stay there wasting my time to stare at one unicorn, but I proceeded deeper in the unfathomable beauty of nature to stare at precariously balanced logs that looked like a fleck in the smoky vastness of such a forest. Trees stood as still as statues, seemingly beautiful, spreaded across like dots on Leonardo Da Vinci's portrait. I beckoned closer and there I saw a pile of majestic mushrooms. This couldn't be true enough to fulfil my appetit. At last, I couldn't resist but touch such a delight. And, now I'm here because of my mistake. I still remember the surreal world that my hands once touched and my eyes once saw.

A FAREWELL TO ENCHANTMENT

And, yes. I have finished my journey like a fantasy movie, a chapter of my favourite book. And yet I'll visit again. If God wills it.

By for now,

Nakshita
