1. If I was given a large amount of money to improve my community, I would give half of it to charity and the other half to research for cures to medical diseases such as cancer. Giving money charity would help give poor people food and water. My reason for giving the other half to research is that many people are suffering from diseases that don't have a cure yet. So if scientists have money they can buy materials they need so they can figure out the cure quickly. This is what I would do if I was given a large amount of money.
2. I would handle a conflict with a classmate or teammate by just saying that we should move on from it. I say this because usually you start wasting time if you continue fighting so the best way is to just forget about it and keep doing the thing you were doing in the first place. Another way I do it is to listen to everybody and then start negotiating with each other so you can come up with a solution. That is how I would handle a conflict with a classmate or teammate
3. If I were asked to teach a class for a day, I would teach my students about compound interest and savings. These subjects are very important because the earlier children learn about these things the earlier they can start doing them and that is good so they can start saving a lot of money. I would teach this class by telling them about the difference in between simple interest and compound interest. After that, I will explain why compound interest is good for long term savings. I will also tell them to be care ful about falling into the traps of compound interest. That is what I would teach if I was asked to teach a class for a day.

Writing

The glistening ruby red velvet danced along the carpet showing all its good moves and beautiful colour. Inside the tiny crevasses of this smooth shining carpet were the stories of the creators. Inside one crevasse was the story of a grumpy old man who only went to the carpet shop because he was so sad. On another side of the carpet there was a sunset of blue and yellow. Inside that crevasse was the story of a young surfer who would go to the beach everyday to surf. He had put all his emotions about his passion for swimming. This is the story carpet.

He walked through the glowing sapphire blue door and was met with something beautiful. Aiden saw an obsidian black castle which emitted an eerie green glow which seemed to be so nice it was like it was pulling Aiden in. He walked inside the colossal doors of the castle. The inside of the castle was the opposite of the outside. The floor was so clear that you could see everything below you. It was so quiet that even if you dropped a pencil it would sound so loud. You could feel the all the crystals shining onto you. This was the beautiful castle.
