

Section 1:

#1 First Paragraph Strengths:

- You begin with a clear opening addressing your audience
- You pose a thought-provoking question to engage listeners

Weaknesses: Lack of Hook and Focus → Your opening fails to grab attention effectively. You write "unmentioned topic" which is vague. The question "Do you know what the best colour of paper is?" needs more buildup. Your sentences "I will I will inform you" show repetition and unclear focus.

I am here today to share an often overlooked yet essential part of our daily lives - the humble white paper. Have you ever wondered why white has become the universal choice for paper?

#2 Second Paragraph Strengths:

- You provide specific examples like manga and official documents
- You attempt to support your argument with evidence

Weaknesses: Weak Evidence Structure → Your supporting details lack proper development. You jump between ideas without fully explaining them. The phrase "literally a white canvas" is used incorrectly. Your definition about white papers is confusing and doesn't connect to your main point about white A4 paper.

White paper serves as the perfect blank canvas for various purposes, from creating artistic masterpieces to drafting important documents. Its versatility makes it the preferred choice for everything from school assignments to business contracts.

#3 Fourth Paragraph Strengths:

- You attempt to conclude with a summary
- You restate your main argument

Weaknesses: Inappropriate Conclusion Tone → Your conclusion becomes aggressive and dismissive. Saying "if you believe that coloured paper is better... you are a fool" is not appropriate for a persuasive speech. Your ending lacks a proper call to action.

As we have seen, white paper's versatility, accessibility, and professional appeal make it the ideal choice for our daily needs. I encourage you to consider these benefits next time you select paper for your projects.

- Your speech needs stronger organisation of ideas and more detailed examples. Try building your arguments step by step instead of jumping between different points. Add more specific examples about how white paper benefits students and teachers. Make your tone more respectful and encouraging rather than dismissive of other views. Expand each paragraph by adding more supporting details and explanations.

Actionable Task: Rewrite your second paragraph focusing on three clear benefits of white paper, providing specific examples for each benefit.
