

Section 1:

#1 (Introduction) Strengths:

- Creative opening that draws attention through relatable examples
- Good attempt at engaging audience through rhetorical questions

Weaknesses: Unfocused argument → Your introduction jumps between different ideas without a clear focus. You moved from paper colours to moulding a beach ball, which confuses your main message. The phrase "This yet may sound like be a page from a narrative book" shows how your writing strays from the topic.

Exemplar: Good afternoon teachers, students and respected principal. Today, I will demonstrate why white paper is the most practical and cost-effective choice for our school. Imagine trying to read important documents printed on purple paper, or attempting to write formal letters on green sheets - the results would be both unprofessional and impractical.

#2 (Clarity and readability) Strengths:

- Good use of contrast example (black on black)
- Attempts to use evidence from immediate surroundings

Weaknesses: Underdeveloped reasoning → Your paragraph lacks clear explanation of why white paper is better for reading. The question "Would you prefer to read black or white or black on black?" needs more development to strengthen your argument.

Exemplar: White paper with black text provides optimal contrast for reading. This combination reduces eye strain and ensures that text remains clear and legible, whether printed or handwritten. Just look at the papers you're holding now - the black ink stands out perfectly against the white background.

#3 (Money wise) Strengths:

- Considers practical financial implications
- Attempts to provide real-world examples

Weaknesses: Unclear organisation → Your paragraph mixes ideas about cost and usage without clear connection. The mention of "OPAL or SAP" needs more context to support your argument about cost implications.

Exemplar: Coloured paper significantly increases office expenses. Large organisations with multiple branches would face enormous costs if they switched to coloured paper. For example, a company with 50 local centres would need to spend thousands more pounds annually just on basic stationery.

■ Your writing needs stronger real-world examples to support your arguments. When discussing professional settings, include specific scenarios where white paper is essential. For instance, mention how doctors need clear prescriptions or how students need readable exam papers. Break down your paragraphs into smaller, focused points. Make your conclusion more positive rather than using scare tactics.

Actionable task: Rewrite your money-wise paragraph by creating a simple cost comparison between white and coloured paper for one specific organisation, including actual numbers and calculations.

Score: 38/50

The best colour for A4 paper: Building a better world

~~Introduction:~~ [Introduction] Good afternoon teachers, students and respected principal. ~~Today, I'll~~ ~~be~~ [Today, I will be] Explaining the most wonderful A4 paper colour our school should promote. ~~And that's undoubtably~~ [And that is undoubtedly] just plain white. #1 ~~Imagine yourself reading a purple coloured magazine or writing a letter on green sheets and even worse spending thousands of dollars in just one stack of such papers only to know that they are unreadable and aren't as formal?~~ [Imagine reading a purple-coloured magazine or writing a letter on green sheets, only to discover they are unreadable and unprofessional - after spending thousands of pounds on them.] This ~~yet may sound like~~ ~~be~~ [may sound like] a page from a narrative book but it's the reality if we turn to completely colourful. ~~Colour may be beautiful and represent vibrant hues but it's just a saying.~~ [While colours may be beautiful and represent vibrant hues, this is merely a saying.] I've had days in prep to be aware of choosing the colour pink to ~~Mold~~ [mould] a beachball, but it ~~doesn't~~ [didn't] go ~~out so~~ [so] well and ~~ruins~~ [ruined] my day. I reckon that this may have also happened to you all.

Clarity and readability #2 White with black markup on top go certainly well together and from my point of view I ~~don't~~ [do not] need to prove this because what all of you are holding is simply a white paper and a black coloured pen. Who thinks that having a black paper and black or even grey ~~led~~ [lead] could be enough to understand what I've written here. Well, there's no more denying. ~~IT SIMPLY DOSNT~~ [IT SIMPLY DOESN'T] WORK. The second arrow comes to would you prefer to read black or white or black on black?

~~Professionalisation~~ [Professionalisation] Either way ~~professionalisation~~ [professionalisation] lies in the delicate hands of white paper. Have you ever seen people delivering crimson red ~~envelops~~ [envelopes] with an orange paper inside or yellow dappled paper sheets that a professor would be writing on or handing out? Well, ~~undoubtably~~ [undoubtedly] the answer is NO as simple as this question is. Paper should be white. You may be wondering why that's the case. Well, it's a very simple answer that Nearly every colour shines on white paper compared to other colours and so, understandably You print or write something to mostly review on it and so you can read it. Imagine how writing on a coloured paper would feel after that purpose of yours ~~wasn't~~ [was not] solved and your manager. ~~He's~~ [He is] still wondering what the letter is saying.

Money wise #3 Imagine. A world of despair where all your income is wasted in the input of a piece of coloured paper would now be called the most wonderful experience with? Coloured paper ~~doesn't~~ [does not] only limit to its readability that plays a crucial role in ~~professionalisation~~ [professionalisation], but also about how the person is going to find a way to afford such usage in office that have up to 50 local centres around the world for example OPAL or SAP and even schools and colleges like James roughs.

Conclusion To sum up everything I've said, White paper is the ultimate ~~savour~~ [saviour] unless you ~~don't~~ [do not] want to starve on the streets, Be kicked out of work and furthermore ~~won't~~ [will not] be eligible to read policies due to the reason that you used coloured paper? ~~Its~~ [It's] time we all change to 90% white paper, or this will happen to you all as well.
