

Section 1:

#1 (First paragraph) Strengths:

- Opens with an engaging rhetorical question that draws readers in
- Clear thesis statement about white being the best A4 paper colour

Weaknesses: Lack of supporting evidence → Your opening mentions white is "definitely" the best but doesn't immediately provide concrete reasons why. The phrase "it may sound really boring" weakens your argument rather than strengthening it.

Exemplar: Have you ever considered why white A4 paper is superior to all other colours? Its versatility and practical benefits make it the undisputed champion of paper choices.

#2 (Second paragraph) Strengths:

- Provides a logical economic argument about cost
- Makes a clear comparison with other colours

Weaknesses: Underdeveloped explanation → Your point about being "cheapest" needs more detail about actual cost differences. The comparison to blue and yellow feels rushed without explaining why artificial colouring matters.

Exemplar: White paper is the most cost-effective choice since it requires no additional dyes or chemicals, making it significantly cheaper than artificially coloured alternatives like blue or yellow.

#3 (Final paragraph) Strengths:

- Links white paper to formal settings
- Concludes with practical applications

Weaknesses: Weak conclusion → Your ending feels abrupt with "As it fits with everything!" This doesn't effectively summarise your main arguments or leave readers with a strong final impression.

Exemplar: In conclusion, white paper's affordability, versatility, and professional appearance make it the ideal choice for any situation, from academic exams to workplace documents.

■ Your writing makes some good points about white paper's benefits, but each argument needs more development. Try expanding your ideas with specific examples and explanations. For instance, when you mention blending colours, explain exactly how white paper helps artists achieve better results. You could also add more real-world examples of when white paper's formality is beneficial. Consider adding a paragraph about environmental benefits of non-dyed paper.

Actionable Task: Rewrite your second paragraph about cost benefits, including specific examples of price differences between white and coloured paper, and explain why these differences matter to consumers.

Score: 34/50

Section 2:

~~Have you ever wondered what the best A4 colour is? Well it is definitely white. It may sound really boring but it also has some benefits.~~ [Have you ever wondered what the best A4 colour is? White stands out as the superior choice. While it may initially seem like a basic option, it offers numerous practical benefits.] #1

~~Firstly it is cheapest because other colours such as blue and yellow will need artificial coloring. Were as white is just white.~~ [Firstly, it is the most economical choice because other colours such as blue and yellow require artificial colouring, whereas white paper remains in its natural state.] #2

~~Colours come out best when they are on white paper because there is no colour so you can see all colours.~~ [Colours appear most vibrant when applied to white paper due to its neutral background, allowing all other colours to display their true brightness.] ~~You can also easily blend colours on white paper such as red to orange.~~ [Additionally, you can easily create smooth colour transitions on white paper, such as blending from red to orange.]

~~Finally, white is most formal if you are working or have an exam. Words and colours will come out really clear.~~ [Finally, white paper provides the most professional appearance when you are working or taking an examination. Text and colours appear with maximum clarity against the white background.]

~~So it is verry clear that the best colour of A4 paper is white. As it fits with everything!~~ [Therefore, it is evident that white is the superior choice for A4 paper, as it perfectly complements any application!] #3
