

Section 1:

#1 (First paragraph): Strengths:

- Creates a vivid image through descriptive language
- Effectively sets up the problem scenario

Weaknesses: Emotional manipulation → Your opening relies heavily on extreme scenarios and fear-based imagery. Phrases like "pallid skin and gaunt, hollow eyes" and "recklessness engulfing them" create an unrealistic picture that weakens your argument's credibility.

Exemplar: Instead of showing children as completely neglected without homework, you could write: "Picture students coming home from school, spending hours on video games and snacks, missing valuable opportunities to reinforce their learning and develop crucial life skills."

#2 (Second paragraph): Strengths:

- Uses personal experience to support the argument
- Clear topic sentence about discipline

Weaknesses: Limited development → Your paragraph introduces discipline but doesn't fully explore how homework specifically builds this skill. Phrases like "sublime way" and "definitely help it elevate" are vague and need more concrete backing.

Exemplar: "Homework teaches discipline by requiring students to set aside specific times for study, plan their assignments ahead, and take ownership of their learning progress."

#3 (Fourth paragraph): Strengths:

- Links homework to future benefits
- Addresses time management skills

Weaknesses: Repetitive ideas → Your discussion of time management repeats similar points without adding depth. Phrases like "boosts time management levels" and "good time managing skills" say the same thing differently.

Exemplar: "By meeting homework deadlines, students learn to break down large tasks into manageable chunks and prioritise their responsibilities - skills essential for their future careers."

■ Your persuasive piece shows promise in identifying key benefits of homework, but needs stronger development of ideas. Your opening paragraph could be less dramatic and instead focus on realistic concerns. Also, your paragraphs would be more convincing if you showed exactly how homework builds each skill you mention. Additionally, try connecting your ideas more smoothly between paragraphs. Your conclusion could be stronger by summarising your main points rather than introducing new dramatic scenarios. Remember to use more specific examples when discussing how homework helps with discipline and time management.

Score: 42/50

Section 2:

Should Homework be Banned

~~Conjure a reality where children swiftly scramble home desperately just to slouch idly on their couch to play addictive video games on their television screens, while they devour bowls of infatuating junk food.~~ [Think about children rushing home only to spend hours playing video games and eating unhealthy snacks.] #1 They have pallid skin and gaunt, hollow eyes with nothing but recklessness engulfing them. ~~Gratefulness gets quaffed out of them, while pomposity starts to invade them.~~ [They become less appreciative and more self-centred.] Their parents are queasy, feel susceptible and ~~like they have~~ [as if they had] no stewardship over their child. Fortunately, this is where homework steps into the picture.

#2 Firstly, homework is a ~~sublime~~ [valuable] way to make sure that children stay disciplined. It certainly assists children in discipline, as it is an opportunity for them to upgrade their organisation skills, which makes them take responsibility for their work. Another way it aids self-discipline is ~~as~~ [because] homework encourages children to try to work independently so that they can develop cognitive benefits that enhance regulation. For example, when I was a young child in the earlier years of primary school, I used to have trouble with time management but homework helped me accomplish that goal and made me more serious and disciplined. Hence, ~~Discipline~~ [discipline] is essential for a child and homework can definitely help ~~it elevate~~ [develop it].

Another reason why homework is stupendous is because it makes sure that children memorise work that they have been completing at school. There may be imperative techniques that children may need to reinforce that will take time and homework can be the extra time children need to remember it. This will absolutely keep children on track and not have a part of education missing. For example, one time, I could not understand how to complete algebra successfully. Luckily for me, our homework that week was granting us the deeper meaning of algebra and how to conduct it properly. Ever since, I have not had pandemoniums with algebra at school. Thus, homework is vital, as it gives children the chance to remember difficult concepts.

#3 My last reason for why homework is important is because it inspires children to manage their time. Homework has due dates that mark the days that homework needs to be submitted by children. This boosts time management levels as it gives children a challenge of when to conduct their homework when they have the spare time to do it. This is an aspect of life that will stay with children for the rest of their lives. When they must start scheduling in future careers, this useful strategy will make sure they have no trouble with it. This is why homework is imperative, as it helps children ~~augment~~ [develop] the ability to have good time managing skills.

In conclusion, homework must not be banned because of the power it possesses to endow children with many essential strategies that will stay with them for life. Without them, life would become a ~~more of a burden~~ [more burdensome] for children. If homework was banned, children would lose these aspects and instead be indolent and emaciated. This is why homework should not be banned from schools because they behold a formidable talent to provide for children.