Section 1:

#1 "Reading books is important because it helps people learn new things and become smarter. Reading is important because it helps people learn new words, understand different ideas, and improve their thinking skills."

Strengths: Your introduction establishes a clear main idea about reading's importance. You've begun with a straightforward claim that readers can easily understand.

Weaknesses: Repetitive opening statements → Your first two sentences repeat the same basic idea that "reading is important" without developing the thought further. You've used nearly identical wording, which makes your introduction feel redundant rather than engaging. The opening lacks a compelling hook to draw readers in and convince them to care about your message.

Reading transforms minds and opens doors to new worlds. It not only helps us learn new things but also develops our vocabulary and critical thinking in ways nothing else can.

#2 "Reading is not just a way to gather information—it is a tool for growth, imagination, and success. It connects people to knowledge, different cultures, and even their own dreams."

Strengths: You've effectively summarised multiple benefits of reading and elevated your argument beyond basic facts. Your language here becomes more inspiring and persuasive.

Weaknesses: Underdeveloped conclusion → While you've included some thoughtful ideas, your conclusion doesn't provide a strong call to action or memorable final impression. The ending feels abrupt and misses the opportunity to inspire readers to actually pick up a book. You need to tell readers what specific steps to take or how they should respond to your argument.

Reading is a powerful tool for personal growth, imagination, and success that connects us to knowledge, diverse cultures, and our deepest aspirations. I challenge you to read just 15 minutes daily and watch how it transforms your thinking and broadens your horizons.

#3 "Someone reading a book set in another country might learn about the customs and traditions of the people who live there. This can help them become more open-minded and understanding of others. For example, reading a book about a child growing up in Japan might teach a reader about Japanese festivals, food, and school life."

Strengths: You've included a specific example that clearly illustrates your point about cultural understanding. This concrete example helps readers visualise the benefit you're describing.

Weaknesses: Limited perspective → Your example focuses only on learning about other cultures in a somewhat passive way, rather than exploring how reading develops empathy or changes viewpoints. The example feels somewhat surface-level, addressing only facts about other cultures rather than deeper emotional or perspective-changing impacts of reading.

When you immerse yourself in a story about a child's life in Japan, you don't just learn facts about festivals and food—you begin to see the world through their eyes, feel their joys and struggles, and develop genuine empathy that changes how you view people from backgrounds different from your own.

Your persuasive piece has several strong ideas about the importance of reading, but it needs more compelling evidence and passionate language to truly convince readers. You've covered many benefits of reading, but your arguments would be more powerful with personal connections or emotional appeals. Try adding questions that make readers reflect on their own reading habits or stories that show how reading changed someone's life.

Also, your piece would benefit from a clearer structure with distinct paragraphs for each main point. This would help readers follow your ideas more easily. Your second task has more persuasive language with questions and emotional appeals, but it's quite brief and could be expanded.

Additionally, consider what objections someone might have to reading more (like being too busy) and address these concerns directly. This shows you understand your readers and makes your argument more convincing.

■

Overall score: 44/50

Section 2: R

Reading books is important.

Step 1: Simple Statement Reading books is important because it helps people learn new things and become smarter.

Step 2: Explanation and Example Reading is important because it helps people learn new words, understand different ideas, and improve their thinking skills. When people read, they gain knowledge about different subjects, which can help them in school and everyday life. For example, if someone reads a book about space, they can learn about planets, stars, and astronauts. This makes them more informed and able to talk about these topics with others.

Step 3: Detailed and Thoughtful Expansion #1 Reading books is one of the most valuable activities a person can do because it strengthens the mind, builds knowledge, and helps people understand the world better. When people read, they improve their vocabulary by encountering new words and learning their meanings. This makes it easier for them to express their thoughts clearly. Additionally, reading helps people develop critical thinking skills. When a person reads a story or a nonfiction book, they have to think about what they are reading, ask questions, and sometimes even form their own opinions. For example, if a person reads a mystery novel, they might try to solve the mystery before the main character does. This type of thinking helps in real-life situations where problem-solving is needed.

Books also introduce readers to different cultures, ideas, and perspectives. #3 Someone reading a book set in another country might learn about the customs and traditions of the people who live there. This can help them become more open-minded and understanding of others. For example, reading a book about a child growing up in Japan might teach a reader about Japanese festivals, food, and school life. This knowledge helps people appreciate the diversity of the world.

Furthermore, reading is an essential skill for success in school and future careers. People who read often do better in subjects like English, history, and even science because they are used to processing information from books and understanding complex ideas. A person who reads biographies of successful people, for instance, can learn valuable lessons about hard work and perseverance. These lessons can inspire them to work hard toward their own goals.

On a deeper level, reading is also a way to relax and escape into different worlds. Whether someone enjoys fantasy, adventure, or historical books, reading can be an enjoyable way to spend time. It allows people to imagine new places, meet interesting characters, and experience exciting adventures without ever leaving their home.

#2 ~~Overall, reading is not just a way to gather information—it is a tool for growth, imagination, and success. It connects people to knowledge, different cultures, and even their own dreams.~~ [Overall, reading is not just a way to gather information—it is a tool for growth, imagination, and success. It connects people to knowledge, different cultures, and even their own dreams. I urge you to pick up a book today and discover new worlds waiting for you on each page.]

Second task

Reading is one of the most powerful tools for learning—did you know that 80% of people who read regularly feel smarter and more confident? Imagine the thrill of getting lost in an exciting story or the satisfaction of discovering something new. Books can take you on incredible adventures, teach you important lessons, and even help you understand the world better. Why miss out on such an amazing opportunity? Why choose boredom when you could explore endless possibilities? Reading isn't just important—it's life-changing. So, pick up a book today and let your imagination soar!