

Section 1:

#1 "To start off with, littering is a huge problem in many countries and islands. Most countries will give only a small fine if they catch you littering, however, in Narnia, big consequences will come out of throwing rubbish on the ground."

Strengths: Your opening provides a clear contrast between Narnia's approach to littering and that of other countries. You've effectively established the severity of Narnia's punishments.

Weakness: Lack of specific examples → While you mention the punishment (Solitary Prison), your writing would benefit from more specific details about how littering affects Narnia's environment. The contrast between "small fine" elsewhere and "big consequences" in Narnia needs more development to show why such severe punishment is justified. For example, you could write: "Littering in Narnia isn't just unsightly—it threatens the island's delicate ecosystem where rare plant species grow that can't be found anywhere else in the world."

#2 "Moreover, Narnia is also very protective of its diverse range of wildlife. Instead of residents taking the form of hunters, everyone who lives in Narnia must help conserve wildlife."

Strengths: You've established a unique societal obligation that exists in Narnia. The mandatory conservation work is an interesting concept that shows how the society values wildlife.

Weakness: Limited explanation of the conservation system → Your writing mentions the Conservation of Narnia's Wildlife (CNW) but doesn't explain how this monthly obligation works or what activities people actually do. This leaves readers wondering about the practical implementation of this rule. For example, you could write: "Each month, residents must dedicate at least five hours to CNW activities such as planting native trees, monitoring endangered species populations, or cleaning wildlife habitats—everyone from schoolchildren to elderly citizens contributes to these efforts."

#3 "In addition, murdering humans is also something Narnia is strict about. In many countries and islands, murderers are a huge problem. On top of that, countries do not know how to deal with those murderers."

Strengths: You've maintained your pattern of comparing Narnia's approach to that of other places. The example of Australia provides a specific comparison point.

Weakness: Oversimplified portrayal of complex justice systems → Your writing presents a very black-and-white view of justice systems without acknowledging the ethical complexities of capital punishment or exploring alternative deterrents. For example, you could write: "While other countries struggle with balancing rehabilitation and punishment, Narnia has chosen an extreme approach—public execution—which has completely eliminated murder but raises questions about whether such harsh measures are necessary when other peaceful societies have found less severe solutions."

■ Your piece presents an interesting concept of a fictional society with extreme punishments for various crimes. You've structured your writing well with clear paragraphs focusing on different aspects of Narnia's laws. However, your writing would be more compelling if you explored the potential drawbacks of such a strict system. Perhaps some innocent people might be wrongly accused? Maybe the harsh punishments create a culture of fear? Additionally, you could strengthen your conclusion by comparing Narnia to existing societies that have successfully reduced crime without such extreme measures. Also, consider adding more sensory details about what life in Narnia actually feels like for everyday citizens—do they feel constantly watched or genuinely free? The contrast between the severe punishments and the "happy" citizens could be explored more deeply.

Section 2:

Narnia, an island with a population of 1.3 million people. But not just ordinary people, people who are safe, free, and happy. With its unique portfolio of laws, Narnia's lush green fields are free of litter, its diverse range of wildlife is safe from extinction, and people are safe from violence and murderers. But why do these laws work on Narnia? Let's find out how these laws are helping Narnia strive for perfection, and why these laws work so well.

#1 To start off with, littering is a huge problem in many countries and islands. Most countries will give only a small fine if they catch you littering, however, in Narnia, big consequences will come out of throwing rubbish on the ground. For example, if someone litters on a luscious field, they will secure themselves at least 2 years in the infamous Solitary Prison. However, littering on the streets won't give you an easier time, for you will secure yourself 3 years in Solitary Prison. Due to this, no one has dared to litter in Narnia since 2003.

#2 Moreover, Narnia is also very protective of its diverse range of wildlife. Instead of residents taking the form of hunters, everyone who lives in Narnia must help conserve wildlife. In fact, if you live in Narnia, you must help the Conservation of Narnia's Wildlife (CNW) at least once a month. This society helps animals which are endangered and tries to save them. Plus, if anyone in Narnia kills or helps kill an animal, they will immediately be sentenced to 10 years in jail. Because of this rule no species has gone extinct since 1967, which was when people first came to Narnia.

#3 In addition, murdering humans is also something Narnia is strict about. In many countries and islands, murderers are a huge problem. On top of that, countries do not know how to deal with those murderers. For example, in Australia, a murderer will get minimum 20 years in prison. 20 years is clearly survivable, so soon, a murderer will be on the loose again. However, in Narnia, murderers will get murdered in front of their whole suburb as an act of punishment. With this rule, no one has ever dared to murder anyone on Narnia.

In summation, these three laws are helping Narnia strive for perfection. With consequences for littering, animal slaughter, and murdering, Narnia is a place where humans and animals can feel safe. If every country had the laws that Narnia has, then I guarantee the world would be cleaner and safer than ever before.
