

Section 1:

#1 Strengths: Your opening introduces an intriguing character in "Detective Dog" with unique abilities. You've created a mystery element with the fox teeth marks and cake theft accusation.

Abrupt transitions → Your first paragraph jumps between three different scenes without clear connections. You begin with Detective Dog examining table leg evidence, then suddenly declare he's "the new Sherlock homes," then jump to him solving a case, and finally make a confusing reference to the Great Wall of China.

Detective Dog stared at the table leg with fox teeth marks on it. "Mr. Frady stole the cake," he announced confidently. Just like the famous Sherlock Holmes, Detective Dog had an extraordinary talent for solving mysteries.

#2 Strengths: You've established Detective Dog's character by showing his determination despite having a bad day. You've also introduced a compelling mystery about the stolen Great Wall of China map.

Unclear plot development → The story doesn't explain how Detective Dog knows the map "got out by itself" or why he immediately decides to go to the Great Wall of China.

Detective Dog examined the museum thoroughly, finding no broken glass or signs of forced entry. "The map must have left on its own somehow," he concluded. "And if it left willingly, I think I know where it might have gone—to the Great Wall of China!"

#3 Strengths: Your ending brings closure to the story with the return of the map. You've created a magical element with the map merging with the wall and the booming voice.

Underdeveloped resolution → The climax where they simply ask for the map and receive it seems too easy and lacks tension or challenge.

When they reached the Great Wall, they spotted the ancient map glowing as it merged with the structure. "Wait!" Mr. Bear called out anxiously. "What do you want?" replied a booming voice from within the wall. Detective Dog stepped forward bravely. "The schools need your map to learn about your history. Could we please borrow it and make a copy to share your story with children?" After a moment of silence, the wall rumbled in agreement.

■ Your story has creative elements with an animal detective and a magical map that comes to life. The concept of the Great Wall of China having its own consciousness is quite imaginative! However, your piece would benefit from smoother transitions between scenes. Try connecting your ideas with phrases like "Later that day" or "Meanwhile" to help your readers follow along. Additionally, your story would be more exciting with a bigger challenge for Detective Dog to overcome. What if the Wall demanded a task be completed before returning the map? Also, you could add more descriptions about how characters feel or what places look like. For example, what does the Great Wall look like when they arrive? How does Detective Dog feel when he hears the booming voice? Adding these details would make your story richer and more engaging for your readers.

---

Score: 37/50

---

Section 2:

Detective Dog was staring at the table leg, it had fox teeth marks on it, ~~"Mr. Frady stole the cake," he spoke.~~ ["Mr. Frady stole the cake," he declared.] Detective Dog was like ~~the new Sherlock homes.~~ [the new Sherlock Holmes.] On Friday, the 17th of March 2025 ~~Detective Dog had a case solved.~~ [Detective Dog solved a case.] ~~Have you seen the great wall of China talk, well Detective Dog will.~~ [Have you ever heard the Great Wall of China speak? Well, Detective Dog certainly did.] #1

That day he was already having a bad day ~~he stubbed~~ [when he stubbed] his toe on the traffic light and when he was just planning to go to the park ~~in~~ [it] started raining. When he sat to relax the phone rang! Mr. Bear was calling to tell him that his museum just got robbed. The robber robbed ~~a~~ [an] ancient map of the ~~great wall~~ [Great Wall] of China, it had where the soldiers stood, and it had the history of it. The museum had been a place for schools to learn about the ~~great wall~~ [Great Wall] of China but without its map no one will want to come there. Mr. Bear was hopeless. #2

~~Detective Dog hatched a plan to find it.~~ [Detective Dog quickly hatched a plan to find the missing map.] He knew that the map got out by itself because there was no broken glass anywhere. "To the ~~great wall~~ [Great Wall] of China!" said the detective. When they reached there, they saw the map merging with the ~~great wall~~ [Great Wall] of China. "Wait!" Mr. Bear yelled. "What do you want?" replied a booming voice. "Can we borrow the map please." said Dog politely. When they got the map, the skies cleared to let a beaming light come ~~thru~~ [through]. They photocopied it and ~~putted~~ [put] it back in its display. The museum was as ~~busily~~ [busy] as it was, and Dog got to relax. #3